As long as you use cool water when rinsing and cleaning. Also to avoid any mold build-up make sure the Nightguard is completely dry before putting it back in its case. 😊 Back to top profile pm

Sleepright is Terrible!

t1218 Guest	Posted: Sat Dec 09, 2006 11:03 pm Post subject: Sleepright is Terrible! I can't believe that they can sell the Sleepright! It is so bulky that I cannot close my lips--they are about 1" apart. Very uncomfortable. The appliance also stays on by being wrapped up and over your gums. Your gums are not meant to have anything rub on them like this. Can this cause the gums to recede? ? quote

We do have a Low-Profile Nightguard available that we recommend for people with sensitive gums or small mouths. The Low-Profile doesn't have the stability wings which is what seems to be bothering you. Also, you shouldn't have a problem closing your mouth with the Low-Profile. The SleepRight Nightguard does not cause your gums to recede. If you'd like you can exchange your Nightguard for the Low-Profile, as long as your still within your 90-day replacement period. 😊 profile pm Back to top

skhouse Guest	 <input type="checkbox"/> Posted: Fri Jun 09, 2006 4:39 pm    Post subject: Keeping the strap down    quote  Am I wearing this wrong because I can't seem to fit the strap correctly? It keeps riding up and/or feels like it is not long enough to go along the bottom of my lower teeth as in the picture. Is there some trick? Is it just by moving the bitewings that will make it work? thanks in advance Back to top
maryb Guest	 <input type="checkbox"/> Posted: Mon Jun 12, 2006 10:16 am    Post subject: Center Strap    quote    I understand your concern. You may adjust your size by moving the bite pads forward or backwards to create larger or smaller fits. Also, may I ask...do you have the Select or the Low-Profile?            Back to top
Guest	 <input type="checkbox"/> Posted: Wed Dec 20, 2006 2:00 pm    Post subject:    quote  I have the same problem with the strap sliding up. I'm pushing it back down several times a night, but the bite pads seem to be where they should be according to the photos. I have the newer Advance model, just worn couple weeks now. Back to top

Also, you shouldn't feel any discomfort from the Nightguard. On the contrary, it is very comfortable and will protect any dental work you plan on having done. 😊

Since using the sleepright, my problems have gotten worse. At the present moment, I cannot open my mouth wide enough to eat, my jaw locks and has to be pushed back into place and I have facial pain and soreness. Also, although I cannot prove that the sleepright cause this problem, my front bridge has come loose and once of the anchor teeth broke. All of this has happened AFTER I started using the sleepguard. I am in so much pain due to the jaw and bridge problems it is affecting my general emotional status. I am at a loss of what to do next but using the Sleepright nightguard will NEVER be an option for me. And since I am way past the 30 day warrantly, I guess I am out my 39.95 ( i purchased my product from Walgreens via the internet). Thanks for the additional pain.

The product carries an 88% success ratio, but unfortunately does not work for everyone. We strongly recommend that you consult with physician regarding your health issues. I understand that you are past your 30-day

You should note that using a product like this for extended periods of time will cause your teeth to passively erupt and come out of occlusion. Meaning, your teeth will not contact each other as they should and you may in the end need massive reconstructive surgery costing thousands of dollars!
Do yourself a favor and go see your dentist and discuss it with him FIRST! This product will not replace a conventional splint fabricated by your dentist.

I dont believe this NY dentist.. because he loses money on not having to do the surgery plus.. it costs too much money for the night guard the dentists make for you.. $300 !! ☹

I agree with writer I did see my doctor and my dentist who made me a 300 dollar device that was hard as a rock and felt like my teeth shifted every morning I took it off! I have used Splintek product for 3 years daily! And visit my dentist every 6 months, he has yet to mention passive eruption or anything coming out of occlusion, dentist writer is out of his mind !
